2.a – Grammar : L'expression du futur.

La projection dans l'avenir peut s'exprimer de diverses manières :

♦ en utilisant le modal Will.

EX. As well as your monthly salary, you will receive certain extra benefits such as free housing.
(«Will» signale que l'action se réalisera indépendamment des circonstances présentes)

- On n'emploie pas Will dans une subordonnée de temps introduite par une conjonction comme WHEN/ AS SOON AS/ UNTIL etc.

☞ When I am older, I want to be a doctor.

☞ She will call you when she arrives et non ~~when she will arrive~~.

Ceci vaut également pour Would, interdit après WHEN/ AS SOON AS etc.

- à la concordance des temps dans une subordonnée exprimant une condition. (voir UNIT 5). Après If, l'idée de futur s'exprime par un présent.

☞ If he comes tomorrow, I'll take him out for lunch.

♦ en utilisant certaines expressions.

Look ! It's going to rain => prédiction faite à partir du présent.

He was about to go to bed when there was a knock on the door => exprime l'imminence de l'acte.

Knowing her, she's bound to be late => exprime la certitude.

The ceremony is to take place in the courtyard of the Elysée Palace => exprime un fait prévu.

♦ en utilisant les 2 formes du présent. Attention au contexte ! (voir UNIT 1)

She is leaving tomorrow.

The train leaves at 9.

- Dans les subordonnées de temps à sens futur, c'est le présent ou le present perfect qui font office de « futur »

They will tell you when they have finished => ils vous préviendront lorsqu'ils auront fini.

Give me a call as soon as you get through to him => appelle-moi lorsque tu l'auras au bout du fil.

- Ne confondez pas 'When conjonction' et 'When adverb interrogatif'

Comparez : ☞ Tell me when he is ready => Préviens-moi quand il sera prêt.
(quand = lorsque, dès que etc. => le futur n'est pas possible)

☞ Tell me whenhe will be ready => Préviens-moi quand il sera prêt.
(quand = à quel moment, à quelle heure etc. => le futur est possible)

3-a - Key Issues : EDUCATION.

“Education” refers to school and universities and not just to the parents’ upbringing.

$1 *One of the characteristics of education in Britain might be deemed its failure to erase social differences; most reforms have tried to address this issue –and still do. The problem may be due to the fact that schools were formerly the sole responsibility of the Church (the Church of England or the Catholic Church for example). This historical inheritance can still be felt today: still one fourth of all British schools are managed by the Church of England. Only in the 20th Century was education made a political concern. The essential step in the reforming of the British system towards more social equality was the reform of the selective grammar schools into the current open-to-all (or one-size-fits-all) comprehensive schools. Still, only the best pupils make it to the A Levels, the difficult exam upon which university recruitments are based. Independent schools, more known as “public schools” are quite typical of Great Britain, a historical inheritance too. There is nothing “public” in these schools, quite the opposite: they are private, very expensive and highly selective. The name comes from their original creation at a time when the children from the aristocracy were more likely to be taught at home by a private teacher ; the then-*

new institution was therefore “public” in the sense that it offered a collective teaching and a collective life through the boarding system. Today most of the British political elite comes from these public schools that gather about 7 % of all British pupils.

$2 *According to the Tenth Amendment of the American Constitution, education is not a federal but local matter. Education is therefore dealt with at a local level, by the individual states. Those in charge of the decisions are the members of the Board of Education -or School Board-, individual citizens elected by the local community: they, not the Federal State, decide of the budget, curriculums, textbooks, teachers etc. The gap between federal level and local level is always present in the U.S. For instance, students’ parents in the South of the U.S. (a conservative region also known as the Bible Belt) have opposed the teaching of evolution as a lie: they defend the teaching of “creationism”, the theory according to which God created the world in 7 days. American schools offer many extra-curricular activities. Classes end early in the afternoon for students to practice sports, arts or music. Universities select applicants through their high schools grades, and, interestingly enough, through their social activities, their involvement in associations and sports,*
